EXPLANATORY NOTE

The Philippines is known as the center of marine biodiversity, having about 2/3s of the known marine species of the Pacific living in its coastal waters. Sharks, as predators of the sea, play a vital role in regulating the ecological balance, particularly the health of important commercial fish species, population balance, and protection of coral reefs. As such, our country plays a crucial role in protecting marine species.

Despite their importance, these predators of the sea have themselves been hunted by humans for their meat and fins. CNN and a conservation group called Shark Savers stated that, “Up to 100 million sharks are killed annually with some shark populations declining by as much as 90 percent.”

Numerous laws have been put in place to protect our environment and its flora and fauna. The 1987 Constitution provides that, “The State shall protect and advance the right of the people to a balanced and healthful ecology in accord with the rhythm and harmony of nature.

Domestic law, particularly RA 9147 or the Wildlife Resources Conservation and Protection Act also provides that, “It shall be the policy of the State to conserve the country's wildlife resources, their habitats for sustainability,” and shall work towards and initiate scientific studies towards enhancement of biological diversity. Said law also recognizes our commitment to international conventions for the protection of wildlife and their habitats, such as the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora, which the Philippines ratified in August 1981. Said Convention seeks to ensure that the survival of wild animals and plants are not threatened due to international trade. It also designates flora and fauna in separate appendices according to the threat of extinction, shark species being described as either threatened with extinction or whose trade, must be controlled in order to avoid utilization that is incompatible with their survival.

The Fisheries Code or RA 8550 also declares it the policy of the State to achieve, “Conservation, protection and sustained management of the country’s fishery and aquatic resources.” While E.O. No. 578 makes it a state policy to protect and conserve biodiversity of ecosystems, species and genes.

Although sharks and rays have not been officially declared endangered, its population has drastically declined over the years not only because of environmental decline but more importantly, over-fishing for human consumption. As they reproduce slowly, they are in danger of becoming extinct if we do not proactively protect them. As such, I urge for this measure to be passed with dispatch.
